Olivia LaField, master public school educator for over thirty-five years and avid proponent of the whole child philosophy of education, believes that by meeting the social, emotional and moral needs of our students, we meet their intellectual needs to substantially greater degrees.

Her primary focus on the importance of building strong personal relationships with her students as well as her unique strategies for creating a mutually-respectful, self-directed classroom of independent learners have earned her several awards, including the 2006 Wells Fargo Legacy Teacher of the Year award, and the 2012 California League of Middle Schools Northstate Educator of the Year. Ms. LaField's extraordinarily high test scores testify to her unwavering commitment to inspire her students to strive for their full potential.
